Because these people live in rural and urban communities in every state, Puerto Rico, the Trust Territories, and the Virgin Islands, the N.H.S.C. offers a wide variety of practice locations—fishing villages in Alaska, migrant centers in Florida, farming communities in the middle west, health clinics in the South Bronx. The N.H.S.C. also offers a wide variety of primary care practice settings—community health centers, migrant health clinics, state and local health facilities, and group or private practices. No two N.H.S.C. sites are the same since each one reflects the characteristics of the community and the preferences of the provider, but each offers unique opportunities for professional and personal growth.
